THE SYNAGOGUE AS COMMUNITY CENTER

Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

Much discussion has been occasioned by a report minimizing the value of synagogue centres, which was issued by a committee of the Temple of Cleveland, with the apparent approval of Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, the rabbi of the Temple. The committee contended that the synagogue should emphasize worship and religion, and should not be encumbered with numerous sideshows, as it were, which tend to subordinate its prime purpose. We recognize the validity of a certain element in the Committee's report, but we cannot concur in it. We agree that the numerous social and cultural activities of the synagogue should never be permitted to seize the center of attention at the expense of the religious. But we cannot agree that the splendid facilities of so many synagogue structures should remain idle five or six days and nights a week, when their facilities could be utilized for socially valuable ends.

Though the ideas for community centres in connection with religious institutions originated on this continent with Jenkins Lloyd Jones, a great Chicago preacher and liberal spirit, for the Jew it was nothing novel. The traditional conception of the synagogue was that it was a house of worship, a house of study and a house of assembly. But the synagogue center movement in the United States owes its recent Renaissance to the influence of Jones. We recall, during our student days, when the Cincinnati Temples instituted centers. The purpose of these was to feed the religious services. Whenever expressed or not, the theory was that give young people a dance, or a debate, or a dramatic evening on Thursday, and on Sabbath morning, out of gratitude, they would come to the synagogue. What happened was that on Thursday the young people came and danced, but on Saturday morning, they failed to appear at services. Just as missionaries bribe Jewish children with candy, so our temples sought to bribe Jewish youth with fun. Just as the Jewish children eat and enjoy the candy, and reject the gospels, so did Jewish youth enjoy their socials, but ignored the invitation to worship. To-day we know the futility of that philosophy. People cannot be bribed to go to services. The temple centres have failed to increase synagogue attendances.

But temple centres have not failed. They have functioned well. They have encouraged an interest in public discussions, in dramatic arts, in Jewish studies, in other socially beneficial activities. They have given youth an opportunity to dance under wholesome auspices. They have furnished young men and women not only opportunities for recreation, but also for creative expressions. Though the centres have failed to increase the number of worshippers, they have succeeded in finding opportunities and facilities for commendable activities.

If the members of the Temple in Cleveland, as the committee reported, failed to take advantage of the center's facilities, but preferred to go to their clubs and play bridge, that is not the fault of the center. That is the fault of the members. When we in Holy Blossom Synagogue organized a College of Jewish Studies this year, for which two hundred pupils registered, only ten percent of which were members of our congregation, that was not the fault of the College, but of the congregation. We believe that the children of the rich need the co-operative work

THE BANQUET

The banquet arranged by the Toronto Zionists last Sunday evening was in many respect the most magnificent affair ever staged by any group of the Jewish community. The setting had the advantage of the splendour provided by the new hotel where it was held. The crowd was perhaps the largest ever assembled under similar conditions for a public cause. The arrangements were almost perfect. Judging from the satisfied expression which some of the Rabbis present bore, while partaking of the repast, even the element of "kashruth" (dietary observance) was not lacking.

What of the financial response to the appeal? We think that the result was one that should hearten the leaders and workers. It is true that a number of people took advantage of the fact that they were in the midst of a large crowd and could not be singled out for more intensive contribution, and handed in unwarrantedly small subscriptions. On the other hand the number of subscriptions was, we believe, larger than that of any previous campaign. When people come to a campaign banquet they usually know that they will have to pay dearly for the pleasure in the way of donations. It speaks well for the generosity of the community that thousands will turn out to a campaign dinner, prepared to be inspired into pledging more or less substantial sums. As for those who tried to "get off easy" there is nothing to stop our intrepid assessors and moral balliffs from paying them a special visit to "high-pressure" their consciences into increasing their pledges.

Say what you will, it takes Zionism with its culturo-idealistic content to inspire a mob of Jews into supporting a cause so far from their immediate needs. Charity strikes a responsive chord. The necessity for it has been dinned and drummed for thousands of years by moralists and religionists. But organized charity with all its fashionable status will never capture the heart and stir the imagination as does the romantic movement for the restoration of Palestine.

THE CAMPAIGN

Zionist campaigns in Toronto are generally big events. They cause a stir and a commotion in the community. Does the public know that these affairs which bulk as large in the economy of communal activities are the achievement of but a handful of individuals? A few men and an equally small number of women, conceive and plan the magnitudinous Zionist undertakings and they toil day and night organizing, preparing and carrying out the schemes for keeping Zionism alive in this City.

Of late years the burdens have shifted from the ample shoulders of the males of the species onto the slender ones of the beautiful members of the race. Hadassah, in Toronto has been the one consistently active Zionist agency, never relaxing in its efforts for the cause. Where would Zionism in this city be were it not for the unremitting zeal of the women leaders and workers?

The Toronto community as a whole has certain obligations. But the community is not a concrete entity. If Toronto Jews were without a Federation of Charities or had no machinery to take care of its Zionist

Deaths

David Berlind, aged 57 years, died suddenly Friday morning at his residence, 5135 Park Avenue, Hornby, Russia. Mr. Berlind first came to Canada twenty-five years ago. He was the organizer and was first president of the Nussach Thaur Synagogue, for six successive terms. He was the organizer and first president of the Montreal Mizrahi and during the Great War he started the wartime soup kitchens in the city for the distressed. Due to ill health, Mr. Berlind resigned as director of the Montreal Jewish Community Council, Montreal Jewish Federation of Charities, Talmud Torah of Montreal, and Hebrew Free Loan Association.

He was an organizer and secretary of the Central Relief Committee. He acted as special representative for the Atlas Insurance Company.

Thirty-eight years ago he married Sarah Silverberg, by whom he is survived, and he leaves three sons: Ben, Felix, and Saul; one brother Moses; and two grandsons. Burial took place in the United Hebrew Cemetery at Carterville.

Mrs. Pauline Gittleson, wife of Julius Gittleson, died in her 53rd year after an illness of three weeks. Funeral Tuesday at 2:30 from the residence, 5039 Sherbrooke street west. Born in Newark, N. J., she was the daughter of Joseph Mayers, painter, lacturer of Newfoundland. She was a member of the board of directors of the Hebrew Maternity Hospital, of the Council of Jewish Women, and Shaare Zion Sisterhood.

She is survived by her husband; two sons, Lawrence and Alton; one daughter, Mrs. Jack Flanders; three sisters, Mrs. J. Cohen, Windsor, Ont.; Mrs. K. Smith, Mrs. A. Harris, Los Angeles; two brothers, M. Mayers, of London, Eng., and B. Mayers, of Seattle; a niece, Mrs. Grenier, and two nephews, Lyon W. Jacobs, K. C., and Nat W. Jacobs, K. C., of Montreal.

To a modest bathroom where simplicity is the aim this Crane Idalia bathe-tory, C 600 S 1,
brings convenience
at an unusually moderate cost.

To make the house you dream of comfortable

Of course in your own mind, you are planning a new house or remodeling your old one... dreaming of the comforts you will have. A bathroom that will offer every convenience, every luxury, and something more. Distinction? Perhaps. An expression of individual graciousness? Certainly.
Naturally the first consideration for this room should be appointments that are perfection itself, mechanically.

Unobtrusively efficient in use... easy to keep spotlessly clean... costing nothing for repairs... and needing no replacements.

Then their design must be in character, contributing to the spirit of the whole house.

In making this dream a reality, Crane Limited will be an invaluable ally. For not only do its materials represent a high achievement in the manufacture of plumb-ing and heating supplies, but they offer the widest range of selection as well.

A trip to the near by Crane Exhibit Rooms or a perusal of the two Crane booklets, Planning a Small Bathroom and New Ideas for Bathrooms, will assure you of this, and uncover just such a bathroom as you have pictured to yourself.

And as for price, you will be pleasantly surprised to find that in many instances a complete Crane installation actually costs less than one where inferior materials are used.

The Bellevue Restaurant on Metairie Street is now once more under the management of Mr. Garber who is particularly desirous that members of the Jewish community will come to him for suggestions and arrangements regarding their affairs.
The Crystal Room, which holds 100 people is very attractive with its crystal pit for the orchestra and lovely crystal chandelier.
A cabaret is given there every evening with an orchestra in attendance from ten until closing. There is no cover charge.
The walls of this crystal ball room are of German silver leaf with gold stars on the ceiling which represents the sky. Off the crystal ball room is a sumptuous lounge furnished with gay wicker. A business men's lunch is served in the men's dining room which seats 150 from 12 to 1, at a cost of 10c. There is a Jewish chef and an excellent menu of Jewish and German cooking. Chicken is often on the menu at the same price. A dinner is served in the evening. On Sundays a very attractive menu is given at $1.50. There is dancing every night at the Bellevue Restaurant. Two small rooms have been specially arranged for showers, bridges, etc. One is just right for a party of four tables, another will hold 20 people comfortably. Mr. Garber will pay special attention to teas, showers, receptions, catering for club meetings, etc.

The Barnett Hotel, St. Paul, Minn., have built a Sun Bath Pavilion which is the first of its kind in the Mountains.
This will give the opportunity to those who are desirous of obtaining the benefits of the Sun in the way.

The fishing season has started and many good catches have been made by the guests.
Sam Rothman fishing in the creek was rewarded with several speckled basses.
Hattie Barnett pulled up a pike and half from the lake right in front of the hotel.

The management intend to pursue their policy of offering their varied entertainments during the entire season.

Synod at Ferrara, 1554. The Counter-Reformationary movement led to a renewal of the perils which threatened the Italian communities at the time of the Hussite wars, which were met in a similar way. A synod was therefore held at Ferrara to co-ordinate measures for the common defence. Among the members were Isaac Abrabanel of Ferrara, grandson of the great Jewish statesman and author of the same name, and Meir Katzenellenbogen, a Polish immigrant who had established a famous Rabbinical academy in Padua. The measures of the synod were principally concerned with the internal regulation of the Jewish communities in matters which might arouse the unfavourable attention of the outside world. Most important of all was a provision which concerned the publishing of books. It was abundantly evident that a great deal of harm could be done to the whole of Jewry by the printing of works containing any animadversions upon Christians or Christianity; the great sixteenth century offensive against Hebrew literature as a whole was indeed partly caused by this. It was accordingly determined that no work should be published without the sanction of three rabbis, and the heads of the community of the city in which it was printed. This anticipatory censorship, forced upon the Jew by outside events, was the first internal check upon the traditional Jewish freedom of expression.

JUNE 22ND.

Judenstadt at Prague destroyed by fire, 1689. The conflagration was started near the Valentinkirche by French incendiaries. Within two hours the flames had enveloped the whole of the Jewish quarter. Ten well-built synagogues were totally destroyed, the roof of one of them falling on one hundred individuals who had taken refuge in it, with terrible results. Others, who had escaped to the banks of the Moldau, were plundered there of all that they possessed. The Jews found shelter with their Christian neighbours in the town during the next three months, until the Archbishop declared that such hospitality was forbidden by canon law. The Ghetto was rebuilt of stone, now being separated from the rest of the city by a wall. It was only in 1792 that the work was completed.

OUR CHILDREN

Subscribers of THE CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW are invited to send in pictures of their lovely children. Give the full name, age, address and names of his parents. There is no age limit for children. Pictures will be returned in good condition. They will appear in THE REVIEW in the order in which they are received in this office.

he might die and his soul suffer eternal damnation, the superstitious servant-girl who was acting as his nurse baptised him by stealth with the most ridiculous travesty of the proper ceremony. Four years later, she confessed what she had done to a priest. He reported the matter to Rome, where the Congregation of the Inquisition ordered action to be taken. A force of soldiers went to the house of the Mortara family on June 23rd., 1858, at ten o'clock at night, and tore the child from his parents' arms, to be brought up in the Christian faith into which he had been formally received. A storm of protest was aroused throughout Europe. Francis Joseph II of Austria and Napoleon III of France advised the Pope to yield: a mass meeting of protest was held at the Mansion House in London; and Sir Moses Montefiore went in person to Rome to obtain the rectification of the outrage. Pius IX remained however adamant. Edgardo Mortara was brought up in the dominant faith, and the work was so well done that when, after the capture of Rome twelve years later, he was given the opportunity of returning to Judaism, he refused. The Mortara Case had a considerable influence upon the development of Jewish organization throughout Western Europe: especially in France, where it was largely instrumental in the foundation of the Alliance Israélite Universelle. The hero of the case is still alive, and has risen to high office in the Catholic Church.

JUNE 24TH.

Second Expulsion from France, 1322. Hardly nine years had elapsed after the banishment of the Jews by Philip the Fair, when his brother, Louis X, recalled them (as usual, for monetary considerations) for a period of twelve years (July 28th., 1315). The number of those who returned was exiguous, and entirely insufficient to renew the past glories of French Jewry. Their sufferings, however, exceeded those of their predecessors. In 1320 the Pastoureaux, bands of young peasants and herdsmen bent on a crusade, ravaged Languedoc and slaughtered the Jews wherever they could find them: the worst instance took place at Jacca on June 24th. in that year. From this date, persecution became general. Finally, the report got about Guienne that the Jews and Lepers, another outcasts, had been poisoning the wells by arrangement with the infidel kings of Tunis and Granada. This ridiculous pretext was eagerly followed up. Massacres took place in many cities, and an enormous fine was levied on the communities of the whole realm. Finally, the new king, Charles IV, expelled the Jews from all of France (June 24th., 1322). From this date down to 1359, none were to be found in the country.

JUNE 25TH.

Burning of Lope de Vera, 1644. A Spanish youth of gentle birth, without any trace of Jewish blood in his veins, his attention was drawn to Judaism by the very ferocity with which it was persecuted by the Inquisition. In the result, he became a convinced adherent of the 'Law of Moses,' and proved so zealous that he endeavoured to win over a fellow-student to his way of thinking. Betrayed by the latter and arrested, he proudly proclaimed his adherence to the God of Abraham. While in prison, he had the temerity to circumcise himself with a bone, assuming the name of Judah the Believer. He vindicated his religious beliefs with the utmost courage before the Inquisitors, who endeavoured in vain to silence or confute him. Ultimately, after five years of imprisonment and torture, he was condemned to death as a pertinacious heretic. On June 25th., 1644, he was burned alive at Seville, in the twenty-fifth year of his age. His fate made a profound impression on his contemporaries, including even Benedict Spinoza. The whole episode shows how the Inquisition overreached itself, winning sympathy for Judaism even from some who were entirely alien by birth from its traditions.

JUNE 26TH.

Tribulations of Yomtov Lipman Heller begin, 1629. He was one of the most illustrious Rabbis of his age, being the author of the famous Commentary on the Mishnah known as the Tosaphoth Yomtov. Called to the spiritual leadership of the important community of Prague in 1627, in the middle of the Thirty Years' War, he found among his duties that of presiding over the commission which apportioned amongst the members of the community its crushing special taxation. In this it was obviously impossible to give universal satisfaction, and he was denounced to the Government for unfairness. On June 26th., 1629, he was sent to the Emperor at Vienna to exculpate himself. A clerical commission introduced his championship of the Talmud into the charge against him. He was in consequence condemned to death: but the strenuous efforts of leading Jews obtained the commutation of the sentence into a heavy fine. With the help of some of his admirers, he managed to pay the first instalment and was released, although prohibited from exercising the Rabbinate in any city of the Austrian dominions, and weighted down with debt. He spent the majority of the remaining portion of his life in Poland, becoming ultimately Rabbi at Cracow. The Fifth of Tammuz, the date on which his troubles began by his exile from Prague, he appointed a family fast-day, counterbalanced by a feast on the first of Adar, when he found rest at last in Cracow. Here he died in 1654, in his seventy-fourth year.

JUNE 27TH.

Massacres at Nanten and Eller, 1096. The Rhineland Massacres of the period of the First Crusade, checked at Cologne on May 5th., had continued with unabated violence in the smaller towns of the region. The communities of Wevelinghofen, Mebr, Keipern, Geldern and other places suffered one after the other. At Nanten one onslaught had already taken place on June 1st. On Friday, June 27th., as the Sabbath was coming in, the butchery began anew. Over fifty persons were slain, including several refugees from Cologne and a certain 'negligent proselyte.' On the same day, an attack was delivered against the neighbouring community of Eller. In order to escape a worse fate, the five principal members slaughtered their fellows and then one another, the survivor suffering at his own hand. Only four badly-wounded youths remained the out of a community said to have numbered three hundred souls.

Montreal Marriages

Caplan—Horn

The marriage of Anne Ceille, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Caplan, to Harry P. Horn, son of Mrs. Harriet Horn and the late Aaron Horn of Brooklyn, N.Y., was solemnized Sunday, June 16, at 2.30 p.m. in the ballroom of the Place Viger Hotel, which was transformed into a chapel, with palms, ferns and standards of peonies, the aisle being spaced off with white satin ribbon. Rabbi Julius Berger officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her gown was of satin, made in mediaeval style, with long tight sleeves, plain bodice and full skirt forming a long train. Her veil of Brussels net was arranged like a nun's cowl and she carried an arm bouquet of Easter lilies showered with lilies-of-the-valley. Mrs. Saul A. Friedman was the bride's matron of honour and her bridesmaids were Misses Jeanette Silberman, Dora Haeal, and Moll Cohen. They were gowned alike in ensembles of mousseline-de-soie, with plain bodices, very full skirts and jaquettes to match. Their matching hats and satin shoes were of corresponding shades and they carried arm bouquets of pastel-shaded sweet peas tied with satin ribbons. Jacob Horn attended his brother as best man and the groomsmen were John D. Kuppenheimer, of East Orange, N. J., M. Irwin Catkin, and Nathan N. Caplan, brother of the bride. Mrs. Louis Caplan, mother of the bride, was gowned in black Spanish lace, hat to match and wore Crusader roses. Mrs. Harriet Horn, mother of the groom, wearing a black satin gown with hat to match, carried Columbia roses. Mrs. Louis Kellner, of Brooklyn, N. Y., sister of the groom, wore an ensemble of blue chiffon, hat and shoes matching and carried Crusader roses. Gifts to the matron of honour and bridesmaids were sterling silver pendants and to the best man and groomsmen, hand-laced English wall-ets. A reception for the immediate family followed the ceremony. Going away the bride wore a three-piece ensemble of green crepe, green felt hat, shoes and bag of snakeskin and a red fox fur. Among the out-of-town guests were John D. Kuppenheimer, of East Orange, N. J., Mrs. Harriet Horn, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kellner, A. Kellner, Simon Marmorek, all of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Saul A. Friedman, of Sault Ste Marie, Ont. The Ever Old and Ever New

By Rabbi Solomon Frank of Shaarey Zedek
Synagogue, Winnipeg

Shabuoth is the day, which tradition has invested with being that moment in human history when the Great Revelation, at Sinai, came to Israel.

A scant two months since Passover, saw them, a group of newly emancipated slaves standing at the foothills of Horeb, participating in what has turned out to be, not only the outstanding incident in Israel's story, but the truly Great Moment, the Central Instant, in the world's chronicles. For at that particular time did a light come forth, which in preceding generations had never been equalled, nor has the succeeding ages ever excelled.

Those two tablets of stone became the banner of Israel and the goal of civilization.

True, these simple laws have become part and parcel of the world's thought. Equally true that they have become interfused with the blood-stream of humanity. But more than all else, they have remained to this day the particular heritage of Israel.

An old Rabbinic allegory has it, that at the moment when the Law was revealed, not only those, who had come forth from Egypt, stood at the base of Horeb, but, equally as well, all the unborn and untold generations of Israel to the very end of time itself.

Clearly, did these ancient sages perceive that the Sinaiic Revelation must ever continue as the especial ensign of the Synagogue, if the covenant, between God and the Jew, was to continue.

And never has this been more true than to-day.

Ours is an age of questioning. The very foundations of life are being examined, and much, that we had considered fundamental and sacred, has been broken asunder.

Yet this simple Revelation, emblematical of the unbroken and unshaken line of Jewish faith and idealism, remains the one Eternal Value, without which life would have no meaning.

Just because there is this ceaseless questioning and scrutinizing, is there the need for the everlasting "I am" which was heard from the summit of Sinai, declaring the people liberated on the Passover, truly free. For he is free who bears the yoke of Heaven. Only he walks free from fear and sin, who has God as his companion and guide.

Ours is an era of adventure and progress; but it must also be an age of law. This it cannot be unless those words heard at Sinai should truly penetrate the consciousness of civilized man and serve as an unswerving guide in his daily life.

Shabuoth comes as a day of reflection. Are we carrying the Law with us? Is it engraven upon the tablets of our hearts and of our minds?

Shabuoth is also a day of rededication, when, from every Jewish heart, there must resound the naaseh v'nishmo, we will do and we will hearken, because:

The Law of old through Moses given, Is Israel's heritage from Heaven.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

"Even if she did not promise to let you kiss her?"

"Even if she did not?"

"And if she did?"

"I should walk to Chicago."

"And if she promised to be your mistress?"

"Oh, what's the use talking that way?" he protested, blushing.

"Aren't you shy? A regular bride-to-be, I declare."

"Stop!" he said, coloring once again.

It dawned upon me that he was probably chaste, and, searching his face with a mocking look, I said:

"I bet you are still innocent."

"Leave me alone, please," he retorted, softly.

"I have hit it, then," I importuned him, with a great sense of my own superiority.

"Do let me alone, will you?"

"I just want you to tell me whether you are innocent or not."

"It's none of your business."

"Of course you are."

"And if I am? Is it a disgrace?"

"Who says it is?"

I desisted. He became more attractive than ever to me.

Nevertheless, I made repeated attempts to deprave him. His chastity bothered me. The idea of breaking it down became an irresistible temptation. I would ridicule him for a silly, appeal to him in the name of his health, beg him as one does for a personal favor, all in vain.

He spoke better English than I, with more ease, and in that pretty basso of his which I envied. He had never read Dickens or any other English author, but he was familiar with some subjects to which I was a stranger. He was well grounded in arithmetic, knew some geography, and now, with a view of qualifying for the study of medicine, he was preparing, with the aid of a private teacher, for the Regents' examination in algebra, geometry, English composition, American and English history. I thought he did not study "deeply" enough, that he took more real interest in his collars and neckties, the shine of his shoes, or the hang of his trousers than he did in his algebra or history.

By his cleanliness and tidiness he reminded me of Naphtali, which, indeed, had something to do with my attachment for him. My relations toward him echoed with the feelings I used to have for the reticent, omniscient boy of Abner's Court, and with the hoarse, studious young Talmudist with whom I would "famish in company." He had neither Naphtali's brains nor his individuality, yet I looked up to him and was somewhat under his influence. I adopted many of the English phrases he was in the habit of using and tried to imitate his way of dressing. As a consequence, he would sometimes assume a patronizing tone with me, addressing me with a good-natured sneer which I liked in spite of myself.

We made a compact to speak nothing but English, and, to a considerable extent, we kept it.

CHAPTER V

A few weeks of employment were succeeded by another period of enforced idleness. I took up arithmetic, but reading was still a great passion with me. My mornings and forenoons during that slack season were mostly spent over Dickens or Thackeray.

I now lived in a misshapen attic room which I rented of an Irish family in what was then a Gentile neighborhood. I had chosen that street for the English I had expected to hear around me. I had lived more than two months in that attic, and almost the only English I heard from my neighbors were the few words my landlady would say to me when I paid her my weekly rent. Yet, somehow, the place seemed helpful to me, as though its very atmosphere exuded a feeling for the language I was so eager to master. I made all sorts of advances to the Irish family, all sorts of efforts to get into social relations with them, all to no purpose. Finally, one evening I had a real conversation with one of my landlady's sons. My window gave me trouble and he came up to put it in working order for me. We talked of his work and of mine. I told him of my plans about going to college. He was interested and I thought him charmingly courteous and sociable. He remained about an hour and a half in my room. When he had departed I was in high spirits. I seemed to feel the progress my English had made in that hour and a half.

My bed was so placed that by lying prone, diagonally across it, my head toward the window and my feet suspended in the air, I would get excellent daylight. So this became my favorite posture when I read in the daytime. Thus, lying on my stomach, with a novel under my eyes and the dictionary by my side, I would devour scores of pages. In a few weeks, often reading literally day and night, I read through Nicholas Nickleby and Family Fair, Thackeray's masterpiece did not strike me as being in the same class with anything by Dickens. It seemed to me that anybody in command of bookish English ought to be able to turn out a work like Family Fair, where "men and things were so simple and so natural that they impressed me like people and things I had known. Indeed, I had a lurking feeling that I, too, could do it, after a while at least. On the other hand, Nicholas Nickleby and Dombey and Son were so full of extraordinary characters, unexpected wit, outbursts of beautiful rhetoric, and other wonderful things, that their author appealed to me as something more than a human being. And yet deep down in my heart I enjoyed Thackeray more than I did Dickens.

It was at the East Side branch of the Young Men's Hebrew Association that I obtained my books. It was a sort of university settlement in which educated men and women from uptown acted as "workers." The advice these would give me as to my reading, their kindly manner, their native English, and, last but not least, the flattering way in which they would speak of my intellectual aspirations, led me to spend many an hour in the place. The great thing was to hear these American-born people speak their native tongue and to have them hear me speak it. It was the same as in the case of the chat I had with the son of my Irish landlady. Every time I had occasion to spend five or ten minutes in their company I would seem to be conscious of a perceptible improvement in my English.

Some days I would be so carried away by my reading that I never opened my arithmetic. At other times I would drift into an arithmetical mood and sit up all night doing problems.

When I happened to be in raptures over some book I would pester Jake with lengthy accounts of it, dwelling on the chapters I had read last and trying to force my exaltation upon him. As a rule, he was bored, but sometimes he would become interested in the plot or in some romantic scene.

One evening, as we were discussing love in general I said:

"Love is the greatest thing in the world."

"Sure it is," he answered. "But if you love and are not loved in return it is nothing but agony."

"Even then it is sweet," I rejoined, reflectively, the image of Matilda before me.

"How can pain be sweet?"

"But it can."

"If you were really in love with Madame Klesmer you wouldn't think so."

"I love her as much as you do." You are always saying you do, but you don't."

"Yes I do." And suddenly lapsing into a confidential tone, I questioned him. "By the way, Jake, is this the first time you have ever been in love?"

"Why?"

"I just want to know. Is it?"

"What difference does it make?"

"Have you ever been in love before?"

"What difference does that make?"

"If you answer my question I shall answer yours."

"Well, then, I have never been in love before."

"And I have."

He was intensely interested, and I confided my love story in him, which served to strengthen our friendship still further. When I concluded my narrative he said, thoughtfully:

"Of course you don't love Madame Klesmer. I tell you what, Levinsky, you are still in love with Matilda."

I made no answer.

"Anyhow, you don't love Madame Klesmer."

This time he said it without reproach. Once I was in love with somebody else I was excused.

The next "season" came around. I was a full-fledged helper now, and, according to the customary arrangement, I received thirty per cent. of what Joe received for my work. This brought me from twenty to twenty-five dollars a week, quite an overwhelming sum, according to my then standard of income and expenditures. I saved about fifteen dollars a week. I shall never forget the day when my capital reached the round figure of one hundred dollars. I was in a flutter. When I looked at the passers-by in the street I would say to myself, "These people have no idea that I am worth a hundred dollars."

Another thing I was ever conscious of was the fact that I had earned the hundred dollars by my work. There was a touch of solemnity in my mood, as though I had performed some feat of valor or rendered some great service to the community. I was impelled to convey this feeling to Jake, but when I attempted to put it into words it was somehow lost in a haze and what I said was something quite prosaic.

"Guess how much I have in the savings-bank?" I began.

"I haven't any idea. How much?"

"Just one hundred."

"Really?"

"Honest. But, then what does it amount to, after all? Of course, it is pleasant to feel that you have a trade and that you know how to keep a dollar, don't you know?"

So far from endearing me to the cloak trade, as might have been expected, the hundred dollars killed it at one stroke all the interest I had taken in it. It lent reality to my vision of college. Cloak-making was now nothing but a temporary round of dreary toil, an unavoidable steppingstone to loftier occupations.

Another year and I should be a fully developed mechanic, working on my own back—that is, as the immediate employee of some manufacturer or contractor. "I shall soon be earning forty or fifty dollars a week," I would muse. "At that rate I shall save up plenty of money in much less time than I expected. I shall spend as little as possible and study as hard as possible."

The Regents' examinations were not exacting in those days. I could have prepared to qualify for admission to a school of medicine, law, or civil engineering in a very short time. But I aimed higher. I knew that many of the professional men on the East Side, and, indeed, everywhere else in the United States, were people of doubtful intellectual equipment, while I was ambitious to be a cultured man in the European way. There was an odd confusion of ideas in my mind. On the one hand, I had a notion that to "become an American" was the only tangible form of becoming a man of culture (for did not I regard the most refined and learned European as a "greenhorn"?); on the other hand, the impression was deep in me that American education was a cheap machine-made product.

CHAPTER VI

College! The sound was forever buzzing in my ear. The seven letters were forever floating before my eyes. They were a magic group, a magic whisper. Matilda was to hear of me as a college man. What would she say?

"What do you want City College for?" Jake would argue. "Why not take up medicine at once?"

"Once I am to be an educated man I want to be the genuine article," I would reply.

Every bit of new knowledge acquired aroused my enthusiasm. I was in a continuous turmoil of exultation.

My plan of campaign was to keep working until I had saved up six hundred dollars, by which time I would be eligible for admission to the Junior class of the College of the City of New York, commonly known as City College, where tuition is free. The six hundred dollars was to last me two years—that is, till graduation, when I might take up medicine, engineering, or law. During the height of the cloak season I might find it possible to replenish my funds by an occasional few days at the sewing-machine, or else it might not be difficult to support myself by joining the army of private instructors who taught English to our workmen at their homes.

The image of the modest college building was constantly before me. More than once I went a considerable distance out of my way to pass the corner of Lexington Avenue and Twenty-third Street, where that edifice stood. I would pause and gaze at its red-brick walls, mysterious high windows, humble spires. I would stand watching the students on the campus and the great doors, and go my way with a heart full of reverence, envy, and hope with a heart full of quiet ecstasy.

It was not merely a place in which I was to fit myself for the better life, nor merely one in which I was going to acquire knowledge. It was a symbol of spiritual promotion. At University-bred people were the nobility of the world. A college diploma was a certificate of moral and intellectual aristocracy.

My old religion had gradually broken to pieces, and if its place was to be by something else, if there was something that appealed to the better in me, to what was perished in thoughts and most sacred in emotions, that something was the church-like structure on the southeast corner of Lexington Avenue and Twenty-third Street.

It was the synagogue of my life. Nor is this merely a figure of speech; the building really appealed to me as a temple, as a House of Sanctity, as we call the ancient Temple of Jerusalem. At least that was the ten-

I would fondly apply to it, years later, in my retrospective broodings upon the first few years of my life in America.

I was impatiently awaiting the advent of the slack season, and when it came at last I applied myself exclusively to the study of subjects required for admission to college. To accelerate matters I engaged, as my instructor in mathematics and geography, the son of our tough-looking presser. I paid him twenty-five cents an hour.

My geography lessons were rapidly dispelling the haze that had enshrouded the universe from me. I beheld the globe hanging in space, a vast independent world and yet a mere speck among countless myriads of other worlds. Its rotations were so vivid in my mind that I seemed to hear it hum as it spun round and round its axis. The phenomena producing day and night and the four seasons were as real to me as the things that took place in my restaurant. The earth was being disclosed to my mental vision as a whole and in detail. Order was coming out of chaos. Continents, seas, islands, mountains, rivers, countries, were defining themselves out of a misty jumble of meaningless names. Light was breaking all around me. Life was becoming clearer. I was broadening out. I was overborne by a sense of my growing perspicacity.

My keenest pleasure was to do geometrical problems, preferably such as contained puzzles in construction. On one occasion I sat up all night and far into the following day over a riddle of this kind. It was about 2 o'clock when I dressed and went to lunch, which was also my breakfast. The problem was still unsolved. I hurried back home as soon as I had finished my meal, went at the problem again, and did not let go until it surrendered. Odd as it may seem, I found a certain kind of similarity between the lure of these purely mental exercises and the appeal of music. In both cases I was piqued and harassed by a personalized mystery. If a tune ran in my mind it would appear as though somebody, I knew not who, was saying something, I knew not what. What was he saying? Who was he? What had happened to him? Was he seeking some grievance, bemoaning some loss, or threatening vengeance? What was he nagging me about? Questions such as these would keep pecking at my heart, and this pain, this excruciating curiosity, I would call my enjoyment.

In like manner every difficult mathematical problem seemed to shelter some unknown fellow who took pleasure in teasing me and daring me to find him. It was the same mischievous fellow, in fact, who used to laugh in my face when I had a difficult bit of Talmud to unravel.

"Why, geometry is even deeper than Talmud," I once exclaimed to Jake.

"Do you think so?" he answered, indifferently.

"I think an interesting geometrical problem is more delicious than the best piece of meat."

"Why don't you live on problems, then? Why spend money on dinners?" "Smart boy, aren't you?"

"Doing problems as sweet as being in love?" he demanded, with deep earnestness.

"You are in love with Madame Desner. You ought to know."

I made no answer.

On the day when I began these calculations I had thirty-six dollars besides the hundred which I kept in the savings-bank. Of this I was now spending, including tuition fees, less than six dollars a week. Every time I changed a dollar my heart literally sank within me. Finally, when my cash was all gone, I borrowed some money of Joe, "rabbi" at the art of cloak-making, thinking the round sum total of my savings-bank account was out of the question. Joe advanced me money more than cheerfully. He was glad to have me in his debt as a pledge of my continuing to work for him. His motive was obvious, and yet I went on borrowing of him rather than draw upon my bank account.

One day I crossed my mind that it would be a handsome thing of I looked up Gitelson and paid him the ten dollars I owed him. It was sweet to picture myself telling him how much his ten dollars had done and was going to do for me. I was impatient to call on him, and so I borrowed ten dollars of Joe and betook myself to the factory where I had visited Gitelson several times before. As he was a sample-maker, his work knew no seasons. When I called at that factory I found that he had given up his job there, that he had married and established a small custom-tailor shop somewhere up-town, nobody seemed to know where. Joe had not even heard of his marriage. Meanwhile, my enthusiasm for paying him his debt was gone, and I was rather glad that I had not found him.

It was the middle of July. The great "winter season" was developing. I felt perfectly competent to make a whole garment unaided. It was doubtful, however, whether I should be readily accepted as an independent mechanic in the shop where I was employed now and where one was in the habit of regarding me as a mere apprentice. So I was determined to seek employment elsewhere. Joe was suspicious. Not that I betrayed my plans in any way. He took them for granted. And so he visited me every day, on all sorts of pretexts, dined me and wine me (if the phrase may be applied to a soda-water dinner), and watched my every step.

Finally I wearied of it all, and one afternoon, as we were seated in the restaurant, I picked a quarrel with him.

"I don't want your dinners," I burst out, "and I don't want to be watched by you as if I were a recruit in the Russian army and you were my 'little uncle.' I'll pay you what I owe you and leave me alone."

"As if I were uneasy about those few dollars!" he said, ingratiatingly.

"I know you are not. That's just it."

He took fire. "What am I after, then? You think I get rich on your work, don't you?"

Our altercation waxed violent. At one point he was about to lapse into a conciliatory tone again, but his dignity prevailed.

"I would not keep you if you begged me," he declared. "I hate to deal with an ingrate. But I want my money at once."

"I shall pay it to you when work begins."

"No, sirrah. I want it at once."

An ugly scene followed. He seized me by my coat lapels and threatened to have me arrested.

Finally the restaurant-keeper and Gussie, the homely finisher girl whom we all respected, made peace between us, and things were arranged more or less amicably.

I obtained employment in an "inside" place, a factory owned by twin brothers named Manheimer.

I was in high feather. My sense of advancement and independence reminded me of the days when I had just been graduated from the Talmudic Academy and went on studying as an "independent scholar." I had not, however, begun to work in my new place when a general strike of trade was declared.

CHAPTER-VII

The Cloak-makers' Union had been a weak, insignificant organization, but at the call for a general strike it suddenly burst into life. There was a great rush for membership cards. Everybody seemed to be enthusiastic, full of fight. To me, however, the strike was a sheer calamity. I laid it all to my own hard luck. It seemed as though the trouble had been devised for the express purpose of preventing me from being promoted to full pay; for the express purpose of upsetting my financial calculations in connection with my college plans. Everybody was saying that prices were outrageously low, that the manufacturers were taking advantage of the weakness of the union, and that they must be brought to terms. All this was lost upon me. The question of prices did not interest me, because the wages I was going to receive were by far the highest I had ever been paid. But the main thing was that I looked upon the whole business of making cloaks as a temporary occupation. My mind was full of my books and my college dreams. All I wanted was to start the "season" as soon as possible, to save up the expected sum, and to reach the next period of freedom from physical toil, when I should be able to spend day and night on my studies again. But going to work as a strike-breaker was out of the question. A new kind of Public Opinion had suddenly sprung up among the cloak-makers: a man who did not belong to the union was a traitor, worse than an apostate, worse than the worst of criminals.

The Jewish Parliamentary Club in Rumania decided to convene a Congress for the purpose of forming a Jewish Nationalist Party. The movement is supported by the Rumanian Democratic organs, but is opposed by the Union of Rumanian Jews.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

On Vacation

You will forgive me, dear reader, if "Commentaries" are not published for the next few months regularly. The author has the courage to indulge in little vacations every summer. Usually he goes in his travels "off the beaten tracks" to learn something new about this odd and queer little universe of ours. You will remember last summer he rubbed elbows with the Bolsheviks and even learned to eat the "borsht", served him in dear and ancient Moscow. This summer, the author of "Commentaries" longs to break bread with the Chalutzim. So he has made up his mind to go to Palestine. Rather an inconvenient place to go to for some Jews—the smug and self-satisfied. After all, the hotels in Palestine may not be up to the minute. And the author can well understand how some of his "all-rightniks" would rather go to Old Orchard "bein yam". However, for the author—the blue waters of the Mediterranean—the mystery and majesty of the Lebanon, and the shadows created by the hills of Judaea. At any rate, a happy and pleasant summer to all readers of "Commentaries". Shalom!

The Sir Mortimer Davis Y.M.H.A.

Next Sunday will be a momentous day in the history of Montreal Jewry. It will mark the formal dedication of the Young Men's Hebrew Association building donated by the late Sir Mortimer Davis.

Is a "Y" building worthwhile? It is. Thousands of young Jewish men and women will find the "Y" a center for spiritual, social and athletic advancement. The "Y" if properly conducted can do a lot of preventative and constructive work in the cause of Jewish youth. It can help mould the lives of young people so that they become better citizens and better Jews.

The Sir Mortimer Davis structure standing at the foot of Mt. Royal marks a marvelous new era in Jewish life in Montreal. May it be a benefaction to the city and a credit to Canadian Jewry. May the building prove to be a social and spiritual power house from where will radiate the true ideals of Israel.

And a word must be added concerning the donor of the "Y". He was not an Orthodox Jew—he was primarily identified with Temple Emanu-El. Yet his heart did beat with the heart of all Israel. Therefore, he made possible the "Y" for the entire Jewish community.

In the light of the above, would it not be well that some Conservative or Orthodox Jew now make possible a Talmud Torah building for the entire Jewish community?

Thank You Habonim!

Those who were present last Wednesday at the meeting of the Zionist Order of Habonim will long remember it for its inspirational content. The Habonim tendered a reception to the Temple Emanu-El group of boys who are about to sail for Palestine. It was a cordial and beautiful gesture of fellowship on the part of the Habonim. Such gatherings as the one sponsored by the Geulah Lodge tend to heighten the Jewish cultured life in our community. The Habonim deserve praise for their thoughtfulness.

Every Friday

With the embattled Louis Marshall and other Jewish leaders and many Christian ministers and laymen against him, Morris Gest was still not persuaded to give up his production of the Passion Play. He moved it from New York to Chicago but not because of the volumes of denunciation written against him or because of any pleas or the coldness of the critics. He moved it because it was not a financial success. How it is faring in Chicago is not known at present writing but it is to be hoped that the Passion Play is going on the rocks and that Gest is losing a barrel of money, the only thing that could hurt him, evidently. One critic hit the nail on the head in locating the trouble with the Passion Play. It failed to bring in money not because people disapproved of it and refused to go for that reason, but because it was dull. All the fine, fiery language of condemnation is as nothing compared to the force of dullness. If it was dull in New York, the Passion Play will be dull in Chicago or any other centre and that will be the end of it. There are few curses like that of dullness and the Passion Play will be yawned out and Gest will be punished as he fits him, selah.

Once upon a time not so long ago no one dreamed that a Conservative rabbi would ever fill a pulpit at the salary of $18,000 a year or anything like it. The boys studying at Hebrew Union College came from Orthodox homes but were not destined for Orthodox pulpits. The latter offered none of the inducements of power, influence, remuneration, and renown possible through the Reform pulpit. As a result, men who had studied for the traditional pulpit, Orthodox or Conservative, frequently left their calling for law or social service or something else. Some of them, of course, were able to experience such a quick change of mind, heart and belief as made it possible for them to fill Reform pulpits. But at last there is the example of Rabbi Solomon Goldman, formerly of the Cleveland Jewish Centre, who is now the head of Congregation Anshe Emes, of Chicago, a Conservative congregation, at the salary of $18,000, not had even for a Reform rabbi!

His salary throws light on the traditional Jewish scene. Orthodox pulpits are finding it hard to pay their rabbis enough for a decent livelihood. But Conservative pulpits are becoming surrounded by stately buildings, prosperous congregations and attractive salaries. The congregations are made up of people who want to break with the old but not too much, not too much. They want to retain as much of the old as they can without making themselves too uncomfortable. They want to be able to boil the silver for Pesach but to ride on Shabbas the rest of the year and still carry some religious label which makes this possible without branding them as complete Goyim. They can't bear the thought of becoming Reform immediately. Let that awful, inevitable process creep up slowly over decades. Meanwhile they will see that the food in the house is strictly kosher and that the dishes are kept separate so that in return for the devotion to their faith they may go to the Saturday morning bargain counter or smoke on Friday evening and call it an even swap with God. Conservative Jewish congregations are full of muddled people who don't know what they want and they are on the increase. As Orthodoxy goes, at its lingering death Conservatism is being made and strengthened.

Rabbi Goldman could not bow to right and left and say piously that he was leaving Cleveland "for a larger field of endeavour" when he was called to the Chicago congregation. Carrying with it a huge salary, Anshe Emes pulpit was naturally a "larger field of endeavour," but Rabbi Goldman could not have said so even if he had no sense of humour, because he did not leave Cleveland in the usual way. He went because he was forced out publicly by trustees who were too hide-bound in Orthodoxy to desire him to stay and apply his work to the demands of the times and the needs of his flock. He simply had to go. Rabbi Goldman is looked to as the leader of Conservatism in this country. He does not compromise and make over his beliefs to suit the market. If he had he would be filling some Reform pulpit and enjoying established koid. But he has stuck with the Conservative wing because he has had faith in its necessity to the Jewish people. To the detached observer with no propaganda to disseminate it seems that the Jewish church must ultimately find itself commensurate of Reform and Conservatism, but, for the time being, the bridge of transition must be built on the backs of Conservative strongholds. Rabbi Goldman is a man of unquestioned brains and ability and leadership in this country. Luck when it has such men in Conservative leadership.

sympathies, then there would be a general feeling that there was something wrong with the community. It then would be up to certain individuals to assume the burdens of providing the needs of the other individuals who comprise the group. The conscientious and enterprising few would in such a case be entitled to the gratitude of their fellows for making personal sacrifices on behalf of the many inactive ones.

The Toronto Jewish community enjoys the reputation of being a good Zionist centre. This is largely due to the inordinate devotion and enthusiasm of the few men and women who work in season and out of season to provide a means of expression for the Zionist sentiment in the hearts of Toronto Jewry.

At Campaign times the leaders—some of them—really make sacrifices of time and health for something other than their own private affairs. It behooves the individuals who sit back passively looking on to lend a helping hand to their fellows. The Zionist campaigns are working for the whole community and they are entitled to encouragement and support.

and play which temple centers offer and provide as much as the children of the poor. The boys from humbler homes have clubs and gymnasiums and organized social activities provided for them. The children of the middle class and rich frequently have no similar opportunities. We recently walked into a millionaire's home. His son was sitting in a large chair surrounded by costly furniture—alone, without playmates. In the Boy's Club, two miles away, at the same time, hundreds of boys were enjoying their games.

The synagogue centers can function in the community, by providing avenues for cultural, artistic and social expression, which our youth and our adults need.

TORONTO'S EXPERIMENT IN PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION

Since coming to Toronto, Mrs. Reuben H. Schutz has been a prophet of progressive education. Herself a teacher, and a mother of children, she desired to make available for her family those newer educational methods which are slowly revolutionizing the school system. Mrs. Schutz endeavored to enlist the interest of the powers-that-be in our city in commencing a progressive educational experiment. They all seemed, and were interested, but they agreed to do nothing.

Single-handed, Mrs. Schutz proceeded. She brought a teacher experienced in progressive educational methods to the city, collected a few children, and opened a school in her home. The school flourished and soon other quarters were secured. At the end of the year a score of children were enrolled and the school had aroused the interest of educational leaders and the general public. Mrs. Schutz is to continue her school. Already another teacher has been secured for next year.

We can recommend this school to parents. We urge them to give their children the advantages which the school offers. In the public school system, because of the large numbers, and the frequently crowded classrooms, children must be treated more or less in the mass. In the Progressive School, the aim is to safeguard the personality of each child. Then, too, public schools move and change slowly. Large institutions with ill-trained personnels possess a certain amount of inertia. They dare not experiment. The Progressive School does.

The school which Mrs. Schutz has commenced will undoubtedly influence the educational system of the province. The methods of the school are not novel and untried, but they are sanctioned by the world's leading educators. Parents who are concerned about the development of their children will not seek out the most fashionable school, but will send their children to the school with the best educational technique. Such technique is employed in the Progressive School, and parents whose means permit it would be wise to patronise it.
